Budget & location notes

Production's capped this sequence at seven thousand dollars, all in. Five locations below, priced at what each one actually costs us per day.

Marlow Street Bar

$900 a day, $150 to move in. No permit - the landlord's an old friend. Holds about twenty.

Platform 9

$1,200 a day, $250 move-in. Live platform, so a permit's required. Room for thirty.

The Signal Box

$3,200 a day, $600 move-in. Permit required, and the access fee is what it is. Tight inside - eight people at a push.

The Late Bar

$1,600 a day, $300 move-in. Small room out past the river bridge, counter and a handful of booths. No permit needed. Holds about fifteen.

LOCATION MANAGER'S NOTE - UNRESOLVED. I am not convinced this is a different room from Marlow Street Bar. The scout photos that came back under both names show the same cracked leather booth, the same window and the same dead jukebox in the corner. But the two were scouted by different people, under different names, and the addresses we were given do not agree with each other. I have priced it separately here so we do not under-book. Somebody has to confirm which it is before we book either one. If it is one room under two names we are paying twice for it, and if it is two rooms and we treat it as one we turn up without a location. I cannot settle this from the paperwork.

Ashgrove Depot

$2,400 a day, $450 move-in. Disused rolling stock parked up behind a wire fence, gravel underfoot, floodlights on the gate. Permit required. Holds about twenty-five.

Ashgrove Rail Yard

$2,500 a day, $470 move-in. Disused rolling stock parked up behind a wire fence, gravel underfoot, floodlights on the gate. Permit required here too. Holds about twenty-two.
