

LAST TRAIN

Draft 1

INT. MARLOW STREET BAR - NIGHT

Under the station arches, IVY nurses a drink in the cracked leather booth by the window. The jukebox in the corner has been dead for years. TOMAS drops a ticket on the table between them.

TOMAS

Last one out tonight. After that we're both stuck here.

IVY

Then we'd better not miss it.

She doesn't pick the ticket up yet.

Do they head straight for the platform and wait it out in the open, or cut round to Ashgrove and pick the train up further down the line? Going to the platform leads into The Platform. Cutting round leads into Down The Line.

THE PLATFORM

EXT. PLATFORM 9 - CONTINUOUS

Rain comes in sideways under the canopy. Ivy watches the departure board flicker and settle on a time that keeps moving further away. Tomas keeps checking the far end of the platform.

TOMAS

Someone's already been down here asking after you.

Whatever that means, they can't stand here in the open to work it out. They head for The Signal Box.

THE SIGNAL BOX

INT. THE SIGNAL BOX - CONTINUOUS

The door shuts behind them and the noise of the rain drops away. Ivy finally reads the ticket properly, and whatever is printed on it isn't what Tomas told her.

IVY

This isn't tonight. This is a week ago.

TOMAS

I know.

He doesn't explain, and she doesn't ask again yet.

DOWN THE LINE

EXT. ASHGROVE - NIGHT

They come in past the fence line at Ashgrove, gravel underfoot, carriages parked up dark on either side. Ivy has the ticket out again, holding it up to what little light there is.

IVY

You've had this a week.

TOMAS

I've had it a week.

Somewhere ahead of them a train they can still catch is being made ready. They keep moving, towards Last Train Out.

LAST TRAIN OUT

EXT. PLATFORM 9 - LATER

The train is there, doors open, and for once nothing is stopping either of them getting on it. Tomas holds out a hand for the ticket. Ivy looks at him, then at the open door.

IVY

You first.

He gets on. She follows. Whatever they were running from, tonight it doesn't catch them - the sequence ends here.

THE LATE BAR

INT. THE LATE BAR - NIGHT

Out past the river bridge, a long way from the station, the same cracked leather booth sits by the same window, and the same dead jukebox holds up the corner. Down to the split in the leather and the burn mark on the sill, it is the room from the opening scene. MARGARET wipes down the counter and doesn't look up.

MARGARET

They were in here for years, those two. Then one night, nothing.

She turns the lights off over the booth and leaves it in the dark.

[Production note: the writer has this as a second bar across town. The location team think it reads as the same room as Marlow Street Bar. This has not been settled.]